the extent of what it says about three years. I mostly wanted to return this bill, or at least use this format to talk a little bit about this bill. I may well withdraw it if the body is not particularly interested. But this petition, this is Senator Schimek's bill, she understands what I'm doing, but this is that the Legislature hereby petitions the Congress of the United States to propose to the states an amendment to Article I, section 2, of the United States Constitution that would increase the length of the term of office for members of the House of Representatives from two to four years. And I just felt, I missed the boat on Select File because I wanted to talk a little bit about it. It went right through on General File. The only discussion I can recall on this issue was DiAnna Schimek, Senator Schimek opening five minutes, and that was all, and I felt that this was of a magnitude that we at least should have more discussion on it. I do not...I assume that many of you are like me, you don't have a broad background on this, and maybe you feel that, sincerely that it should be automatically four years. I don't necessarily feel that it should automatically go to...from two to four years for the House of Representatives. And if so, I think the body ought to recognize the decision that you made here today because it does petition Congress. It's a long route to becoming a constitutional amendment and, historically, the Senate has blocked this, probably, by and large, for politically reasons, not wanting someone from a safe House seat at two years to be able to run for a Senate seat that has a safety of six years. And so I don't really have all the ins and outs and the discussion of this probably even prepared as good as I should be today because I would acknowledge the need for four. Four years would certainly provide more experience for a typical Congressman than the two years does. On the other hand, I think we ought to consider it in the light of term limits. I would say a four-year term, in this case for the House of Representatives, is going to provide...does have ramifications. It is going to provide more security for incumbency and we're saying, at least the public is saying, I do not particularly support, I do not support term limits, but the public, and it's general across this country, is saying they support term limits. Here we are, really in a sense, going in the face of that by providing four years security for a term of office instead of just two. So I think you could make the case that this actually extends the
